Squire Demarest will be buried this morning, and all the surrounding country is expected to turn out and attend his funeral. During his last lliness he was nursed by his nice. Mrs. Holdrum, and it is generally expected that she and her husband will get thouk of his fortune. The Squire's death was caused by rheumatism, from which he has been a sufferer for years. For the last year he has ecarcely been out of the house, and Dan O'Neill, his man Friday, has faithfully watched over him and attended to his wants during this time.

tectives Sullivan and Lang of the West Thirtieth street station, and three women were arrested. Complaints from residents near by and from the teachers of the public school on West Twenty-eighth street had been made concerning the house. It was said that the women attempted to induce the school children passing by to enter the house, and that they sat in the windows and solicited men.

At Jefferson Market Court yesterday Lydia Dullerge was charged with being the proprinces of the place, and was held in $500 tail for trial on that charge. The other two women, one of whom was the proprietzen's sister, were sent to the Island for two months.

Mr. Horton went home early Saturday afternoon in order to give his wife an opportunity to practise at the traps. The little woman started in to shoot, and just as she pulled the trigger and shattered the thirteenth dish on a straight string her husband's head and shoulders appeared above the stone protection in front of the traps, and she saw blood on his face. As Mr. Horton fell and she heard no sound she thought he was shot. Rushing to him she found him unconscious, with blood streaming from a gash near the temple.

A free application of water resuscitated the injured man in about five minutes, by which time a neighbor in a house near by who witnessed the occurrence sent for Dr. McFadden, who found the patient suffering from a severe scalp wound. Mr. Horton explained that the trap was aprung prematurely from some unknown cause and knocked him over. Mrs. Horton says she will continue her practice when her husband is able to trap for her if he will promise to be very careful.

of decos. The period of the control of a matter for untutored neighbors, who thought far more of Squire Demareat's opinion of a matter in dispute than of that of the Chief Justice of Yew Jersey. Besides all this it was generally believed that hid away in his little old-fashioned frame house there were great rolls of bank notes, and that stuffed in every crevice were unnumbered gold coins. Since the Equire died on Saturday morning, at the age of 8s, the neighbors have been busy trying to compute the amount of his savings.

"He must have had at least $200,000," said an old citizen of Hillsdale to a reporter yerterdar, "and if you had seen him on the streets you would not have though the was worth ten cents. I have known him for fifteen years, but I never saw him between the first of May and the first of November in my life unless he was barelected. He never had anything to do with folks in the village in my recollection, though they say that at one time he had his finger in everybody's husiness in these parts. He had nowomen folks about the house since his wife died in the Morris Plains Insane Asylum three years ago. They weren't married till she was 12 and he some years older.

"Every time the Squire turned out Dan C'heil, his man of all work, was sure to be pear at hand. Dan lived with the old man, and did the cooking and all the other women's work, and i hope he'll get some of the money that tokks say is stuffed away in the old house. Abe Holdrum will get it all, however. Abe, you know, married the Squire's niece, and I guess he's the only relative he had left.

"There'll be some tall old bidding when the Squire's effects are put up for auction. When he got home and opened the clock to set it a going he found $35 in gold among the work. Jim was considerable of a miser himself, and the recollection of that $35 is just making folks here crazy.

CURRENCY SUPERSTITIONS.

The superstitious reverence with which this $100,000,000 gold reserve has been regarded, the spasms of terror which the idea of impairing it has inspired, and the purely imaginary grounds upon which its claims to consideration rest, remind me of the story which the god Serapis at Alexandria, Egypt. This cothing like our statue of Liberty on Bedlow's Island, and housed in a magnificent temple, was, down to nearly the end of the fourth century, respected and dreaded by Christians and pagans alike, and it was believed that if any violence were done to it heaven and earth would return to chaos. At last, however, a few of the more enlightened Christians of the city resolved to destroy it, and after a violent strug-gle with its guardians they gained possession of the sacred precincts which surrounded it. The crowd which had gathered looked on in breathless suspense while an intrepid Christian soldier mounted a ladder and with his battle-axe began hewing at the idol's head. The first blow sent a shiver through the speccataclysin which they thought was coming. It did not come, of course, and another blow sent a piece of metal flying, another blow another piece, and, after a few blows more, the mob, taking courage, rushed in and themselves completed the work of destruction, amazed and delighted at their immunity from punishment. It is to be hoped that people in Wall street will not hasten to destroy in like manner what remains of the gold reserve in the Treasury, but

A similar superstition, which, though its hold has been weakened by the exposures to a large extent the public mind, is that relating to sales for gold of Government bonds as a protection against the apprehended suspension of gold payments by the Treasury. THE SUN has stood alone among the newspapers in this city in pointing out both that no authority is vested in the Secretary of the Treasury by any act of Congress to sell bonds for the purpose of obtaining gold, and that even if he possessed such authority he could not at present exercise it. The Resumption act of 1875, which is relied upon by the advocates of a bond issue, says not one word about gold, nor about a reserve of gold. It merely and for coin only to the extent needed to redeem the legal tender notes which were outstanding Jan. 1, 1879. Selling bonds, even for coin, so long as the Treasury has on hand. as it has now, nearly $100,000,000 in gold coin and over $6,000,000 in silver coin, would be so palpable a usurnation of power that it is wonderful how any official could seriously contemplate it. As to the Treasury notes which have been issued under the act of July, 1800, they are expressly payable in silver at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he is directed to coin out of the bullion, for the purchase of which they are issued, as many silver they would not be struck by lightning if they did so.

Undoubtedly the time will ultimately arrive when the continued issue of legal tender Treasury notes under the act of 1800 will have driven gold out of use as money in this counabroad some $100,000,000 of the metal, and the work is going briskly on, as we see. How much longer it will take to complete the basis of our currency depends upon a variety is impossible exactly to estimate. It must not be forgotten, however, that every ounce of gold that Europe takes from us helps to glut the market for it there, and, by contracting the currency here, to hinder its further withdrawal. The rate of interest in the financial centres of Europe is already low, and the more gold that goes there from this country the lower it is likely to be. Besides, the addition of this gold to the volume of currency in Europe tends to raise the prices of commodities there, and thus to check the exportations of them to this market which, under the stimulus of our abundant paper money, are now so large. It elapse before the $100,000,000 now in the Treasury will be exhausted, and the sale of bonds for replenishing it now, would be as premature as it is unauthorized by law. Moreover, the sale of bonds for gold, either now or at some future time, even if made under a new act of Congress, would be only temporarily effective unless it were accompanied by a repeal of the act of July. 1890, under which our paper currency is increased at the rate of nearly $50,000,000 per annum. It is a law of finance confirmed by repeated expe riences that redundant currency, like any other redundant commodity, tends to flow from the localities where it is redundant to those where it is less so. It is also a finan-cial law that the more valuable currency goes away under these circumstances. As we see now, we export gold coin and not silver coin because the gold is the more valuable of the two in the European market. With $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 of paper money added to our present stock of it, we should, no matter how many bonds we sold for gold. have available for export not $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 of paper, but only gold, and the gold would go, leaving us only the paper. We should then, to replace the gold, have to sell more bonds, and thus we should go on inflating our paper currency indefinitely, and maintaining gold payments, if we maintained them at all only by the most strenuous efforts. What adds to the difficulty is the fact that the bonds issued would be used by our our national banks as a basis of circulation, and thus to the paper money poured out under the act of July, 1800, would be added the contributions of the banks. Another superstition from which the country still needs to be delivered, is that a suspension of gold payments will lead to bankruptey and ruin. Currency is only a measure of value, and whether that measure be a gold dollar or a paper dollar or a silver dollar, the value of the commodities for which it serves as a medium of exchange remains the same. It is true that creditors having debts payable to them in lawful money will lose, and their debtors will gain, by the substitution of dollars of inferior value for those now current; but this will not bankrupt them, since they cannot be bankrupted if they have no debts to pay, or if they have, they can pay them in the same kind of money that they receive. Even to debtors the benefit of the change from the present dellar to one of inferior value will last only until their debts are paid, for, when they buy goods or contract fresh debts it will be upon the new basis, and the goods or the property which they get, either for cash or upon credit, will be estimated at their real value. and the number of dollars required in exchange for them will be increased according to it. That much inconvenience will result until business adjusts itself to the new currency is true, and the establishment here of a kind of money which exists nowhere else in the com-mercial world will cut us off from financial assistance from elsewhere in times of monetary stringency, but that is a remoter result and need not be considered, except as an argument against a change of standard. The danger to which we are really most exposed at this moment is that some day when we least expect it the multitude of small holders of legal tender notes, moved by an inexplicable cause, or alarmed by a meaningless event.

LUCKY FARRELL. Accused of Theft and Forgery, but He Went to the Races and Picked a Winner. Justice William N. Rapp of Newark had a peculiar case last week. A little woman went to him and told him that her husband was a forger and a thief, and that he had robbed her father of $100 on Wednesday by copying his signature upon a piece of ground glass and signing a check for that amount. She said that he took the money to the race track and lost all but $5, and she wanted to have him locked up.

Justice l'apotock her complaint and issued avacrant for the arrest of John Fairrell, but Justice lapp took her complaint and issued a warrant for the arrest of John Farrell, but while the officers were searching for him they learned that he had gone back to the track and had won $180, ite returned home with the money, paid his father-in-law $100, and was forgiven. His wife then sent a note to Justice Rapp, begging him to do nothing further in the case. That night Farrell arcse and stole the $100 from her father, together with $6 more, and again de-amped. Mrs. Farrell refused to press the comidaint ascend time, but Justice happ will have the man arrested, if possible, to get the costs in the case.
